Kinsella Defeats Ried in Opening Match for World's Professional Squash Tennis Championshin

Slender Challenger Vanquished By Scores of 15-5, 15-8, 15-10

Emergency Seating Arrangement Necessary at Yale Club When "Pro" Stars Swing Into Action; Second Match Will Be Played Next Wednesday

Walter A. Kinsella, professional squash tennis champion of the world, defeated his challenger, James Ried, of the Crescent Athletic Club, by a accisive margin yesterday afternoon at the Yele Club, in the first match of their contest for the laurels now worn by Kinsella. Displaying superiority in almost every department of the game, the stalwart Kinsella w from his slender opponent in straight games, 15-5, 15-8, 15-10.

Squash courts galleries are, of necessity, extremely limited as to acmore than probable that ten or fifteen times the number of spectators present yesterday would have been on hand had there been any place to put them. Besides the regular gallery seats to the rear of the courts, Frank Lafforgue, the Yale professional, had installed an emergency gallery along the side. there was room for several score of standees. fight out their opening battle for the title.

It should be said for Ried that he is capable of better squash tennis than he was able to produce yesterday. His play was brilliant at times and he improved as the match wore on, but it was plain that he was slightly nervous and hence not able to do his best. In the second match, next Wednesday, he ought to do better, but, even so, everything indicates that Kinsella will retain his championship.

Harold L. Mixsell, champion of the Princeton Club, acted as referee of the match and, by previous agreement, only called "lets!" when appealed to by either of the players. Charles M. Bull jr., of the Crescent Athletic Club, was the scorer.

Kinsella began the service and ran out the hand without allowing his opponent a point. The champion was like a flash in getting into position, and showed an uncanny sense of anticipation. While he did not place reliance on excessive pace on his shots, he always applied the power when power was the thing, some of his forehand drives being tremendously swift and always well placed tally.

In the last game both champion and challenger put all they had into the exchanges and the ball often traveled around the court at such speed the eye could scarcely follow its flight. Ainsella made some spectacular recoveries of placed shots, sometimes making the return by getting his racquet between his legs, off both fore and backhand shots. Ried fought hard and eleverly, scoring more points and backhand shots. Red longni-hard and cleverly, scoring more points in this game than in either of the other two, but Kinsella always ap-peared to have something in reserve when called upon.

The champion attacked Ried's backhard pretty consistently, and the challenger showed a weakness in this respect, rarely being able to get any pace on the ball when it came to his left side. Both men stirred the gallery by their sensational gets of shots that appeared impossible of return. Kinsells, the more powerful player, seemed to witnestand the fast pace far better than Ried, and the latter, although playing beautifully, was able to get only 5 points before the champion had taken the first game.

The second session found Kinsella going at an undim'nished pace, and it was not until the fifth hand that Reid came into his own. Here he gave his supporters a thrill by scoring aix points, the result of dazzling racquet work, and Kinsella was forced to be content with a single point. Reid was placing his service so close to the side wall that Kinsella had difficulty in handling his returns for a time. In the next four hands, however, the world's champion speeded up and rancut the game with seven more points, not allowing his challenger another tally.

coaches, who have so organization of their own. There ought to be a deal of snappy talk and pithy gossip at that powwow. There are to be some changes at the colleges for next year. The Army will have to name somebody to succeed Major Daly at West Point Columbia will have a new head coach, so will W. and J., and it has been bruited about that Heisman will not be back at Pennsylvania. Al Jourdet has been mentioned as Penn's next head coach. He played end there in his day, and has been successful in basketball coaching.

I imagine Columbia will take its time about selecting a new coach. That would seem the sensible thing to do—to go slow, then pick the best available. It is a berth few coaches would not like to land, so there probably is a large and select field to choose from. One of the best coaches in the country is Fred Dawson, of Nebraska but staying West is a matter of health with Dawson.

Invisible Flashes

Once in a while some invisible flash, otherwise known as a hunch, will work wonders.

It is no infrequent thing to get a sudden, unexplainable hunch that one is going to win or lose, a form of auto-suggestion that is in no sense deliberate.

Sarazen undoubtedly improved his chance at Skokie by constant reiteration that he was going to win. It seemed to become a definite belief in his case before a drive was made. This may sound extremely foolish in drive was made. This may sound extremely foolish in such a field. Yet the fact remains that even after his third round, which left him well on the outside, he never wavered in his statement. "I'm about due now," he said, "to burn up this course." And a 68 followed.

The entry who can make himself believe he is going to win and then can continue this belief through a run of hard luck, is always to be feared. But the man who says "Every day, in every way, I am getting better and better" and then happens to stumble and fall
